Have an athlete in your family?

Speed and agility training are key components for improving upon an athlete's performance.

Sports science research supports the notion that ballet and dance can enhance agility and other measures of sports performance. Agility is as important, and often more important, than muscle strength for dance routines and for sports such as martial arts, soccer and basketball.

If you want to excel at dance or sports, agility training should be a part of your daily fitness program. You can improve agility using a variety of exercises. Agility depends much on how quickly muscles respond to signals from the brain. Specific Agility training helps improve muscle response speed. Some actions can become nearly instantaneous. Instructor: Hope Von Sas
